

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY CAMDEN FIFTH SERIES

Travel, Trade and Power in the Atlantic, 1765-1884

The first part of the Miscellany contains the correspondence of Simon Taylor, 1765-1775, on the management of the Jamaican estates of British M.P. Chaloner Arcedekne. These detailed and often highly picturesque letters form the most important collection of private correspondence on the political history of Jamaica in the period they cover, and comment extensively also on the imperial connection with Britain.

The second part describes three voyages made by John Chandler Langdon to Africa in the early 1880s, and provides a vivid picture of life on board a sailing ship. It tells us much about Bristol, its merchants in the African trade, the techniques used in that trade and the commercial potentialities of parts of West Africa at the moment when the scramble for the region was getting underway.

BETTY WOOD is a Reader in American History at Cambridge University.

MARTIN LYNN is a Reader in the School of Modern History at The Queen's University of Belfast.

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

0960-1163(200207)19;1-M

ISBN 0-521-82312-9

9 780521 823128