

A Layman's Quest

SIR MALCOLM KNOX

A revised and enlarged version of his Gifford Lectures. It begins by arguing that to have a religion is reasonable; it then answers the questions 'What religion' and 'How much of orthodox Christianity is it reasonable to believe?' 40s

Theology and Meaning A Critique of Metatheological Scepticism

RAEBURNE S. HEIMBECK

Argues for the cognitive nature of religious discourse, showing that such discourse can qualify as cognitively significant without having to satisfy the verification requirement. Secondly, it shows that it does in fact satisfy such a requirement because it is firmly rooted in the empirical realm. 50s

The Moral Life

OLIVER JOHNSON

Develops a theory answering the primary question of practical morality 'How ought we as moral beings act?' and solves the equally crucial issue of theoretical ethics, 'Why ought we to act this way?' 25s

Respect for Persons

R. S. DOWNIE and ELIZABETH TELFER

A sustained examination of the idea, in the language of analytical philosophy, of the individual person as of supreme worth is fundamental to the moral, political and religious ideals of our society. Cloth 40s, Paper 20s

Contemporary Philosophy in Australia

Edited by ROBERT BROWN and C. D. ROLLINS

These essays, displaying some of the variety in subject matter, viewpoint and method of argument in modern Australian philosophy, range from logical theory and philosophy of science to perception theory, ethics, and the philosophy of mind.

Eastern Wisdom and Western Thought

P. J. SAHER

Whereas Western philosophical thought is still expressed in terms of 'either-or', good or bad, Eastern Philosophy is expressed in terms of 'both and . . .'; the dots refer to the essence of Being. This book is a plea for the latter approach as a basis for a new synthesis called World Philosophy.

Ontological Relativity and Other Essays

by W. V. Quine

Intended to clarify the meaning of philosophical doctrines propounded by Professor Quine in Word and Objects, these essays carry his doctrines even further. All are intimately related and concern themselves with three philosophical preoccupations: the nature of meaning, the meaning of existence, and the nature of natural knowledge.

Plato: Dramatist of the Life of Reason

by John Herman Randall Jr.

The author offers a personal statement of what he has found to be not merely the significance for the present day but the eternal and ever-renewed significance of Plato. The emphasis is on Plato as a dramatist and poet rather than as an architect of a rigid system of interlocking ideas. In his analysis, the dialogues emerge not as programmes of action but as dramatic portrayals of the life of the mind—of the follies, contradictions, enthusiasms, and greatness of human thinking as beheld by a detached and ironic intelligence.

Phenomenology and Existentialism

Edited by EDWARD N. LEE and MAURICE MANDELBAUM

The Essays in this volume are directed toward providing a moderately advanced introduction to two important movements in modern philosophy. The approach is basically historical and each essay focuses on a key figure and the tenets of his thought.

The Teaching of Charles Fourier

By NICHOLAS V. RIASANOVSKY

Charles Fourier has generally been studied in only one or another of his various roles, such as that of social critic, precursor of Marx or theoretician of the co-operative movement; most writers have been unprepared to admit, let alone accept, the totality of his teaching.

Nihilism

A Philosophical Essay
by Stanley Rosen

Firstly, Mr. Rosen demonstrates the nihilistic conclusions and the essential theoretical unity of the two major contemporary philosophical movements, ordinary-language analysis and fundamental ontology. He then sketches the crucial stages in modern philosophy which generated nihilism, examines its political consequences and offers a way in which philosophy may return to Platonic understanding of the unity between reason and the good. Finally he shows that nihilism is a permanent possibility of human nature and indicates how the love of wisdom may keep it within bounds.

More's 'Utopia', Ideal and Illusion

by Robbin S. Johnson

This analysis of one of the central documents of Western humanism examines not only the two principal divisions of Utopia but the various introductory materials. Mr. Johnson shows Utopia to be less a final goal and more an attitude or stance—an ability to detach oneself while still preserving one's involvement in life—a matter which is crucial to the understanding of both the balanced dialogues of Book One and the ironically retold monologue of Book Two.

Freud and Philosophy

An Essay on Interpretation
by Paul Ricoeur
translated by Denis Savage

In this book are revealed Ricoeur the philosopher of language; Ricoeur the critic of Freud; and Ricoeur the theologian of religious symbol. The author is outstanding in all three roles, and the book that emerges is of rare profundity, enormous scope, and complete timeliness. The first part of Freud and Philosophy, "Problematic", presents a profound and clear theory of signification, symbol and interpretation. The second part, "A Reading of Freud", is required reading for anyone seriously interested in psychoanalysis. The third section includes a thoroughly audacious interpretation and criticism of Freud and a presentation of Ricoeur's own theory of symbol—particularly religious symbol—which places this study at the centre of contemporary debate over the sense of myth.

Do Religious Claims Make Sense?

Pleasure and Desire

The Case for Hedonism Reviewed

J. C. B. GOSLING

An evaluation of the arguments for or against hedonism requires a thorough examination of the concept of pleasure and its relation to that of wanting. This book shows that recent dismissals of hedonism have been too cavalier, and suggests that hedonists have in fact been feeling their way towards points of some importance for ethics. The argument raises the question of what claims to conceptual priority or centrality might amount to, and some suggestions are made on this point. 30/-

The Psychology of Maine de Biran

F. C. T. MOORE

Maine de Biran (1766-1824) was the greatest metaphysician of his time. His works pose a challenging and important thesis in the philosophy of mind, based on the primary role attributed to the notion of the will. This book explains and documents his thought, and gives sympathetic but critical interpretation of his position. 45/-

The Possibility of Altruism

Thomas Nagel

This book defends a conception of ethics, and a related conception of human nature, according to which altruism — which depends on a recognition of the reality of other persons, and on the capacity to regard oneself merely as one individual among many — is included among the basic rational requirements of desire and action. 30/-

A History of Greek Philosophy

Volume III: The Fifth-century Enlightenment

W. K. Guthrie

'He writes simply and clearly without pretension. He is always in control of his arguments, never lets us lose sight of the central thread and never causes needless confusion by pointless digression or misplaced erudition'. Philosophical Studies

The third volume of Professor Guthrie's great work on the history of Greek thought deals fully with the Sophists, leaders of the fifth-century Enlightenment, and their great contemporary, Socrates. It is a record of the fundamental shift of philosophical interest from the universe to problems of human life and conduct and the nature and values of civilization. £5 net

Ethical Values in the Age of Science

Paul Roubiczek

We live in an age in which the significance of ethics is increasingly brought into question and morality is frequently seen as determined by non-moral factors which can be scientifically ascertained. Mr. Roubiczek's concern in this book is to show that there is still a need and a place for ethical values.

Philosophy and the Meaning of Life

Karl Britton

Professor Britton takes two fundamental questions—"Why do I exist?" and "Why does the universe exist?"—and subjects a series of possible answers to philosophical analysis. His treatment of these universal problems and his use of contemporary methods make this an excellent introduction for those approaching philosophy for the first time.

An Approach to Descartes' 'Meditations'

FREDERICK BROADIE

Dr Broadie sets out to deal with the 'Meditations' at its profoundest levels. His book is less a commentary than a sustained attempt to reconstruct the work in the light of Descartes' central metaphysical purposes and his insistence that it be studied not as a mélange of unconnected topics but as a system of thought no less coherent than a geometrical demonstration and therefore no less intelligible.
