The Journal of Interdisciplinary History

Published quarterly
by The MIT Press.

Robert I. Rotberg
Theodore K. Rabb
Editors

The Journal of Interdisciplinary History has long been an essential resource for historical research as well as work in applied fields, such as economics and demographics. The journal presents substantive articles and book reviews on topics spanning every geographical area and period of history. There are also research notes discussing methodological innovations in historical writings. Topics covered include social history, psycho-history, family history, economic history, cultural history, and technological history.

Increase your awareness of the world: its beginnings, its present position, and its potential future. Subscribe today to JIH!
