

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

BURTON ATKINS is Professor and Chair, Department of Political Science, Florida State University. His articles on judicial decisionmaking and appellate courts have appeared in a variety of social science journals. His current research involves a cross-national study of Anglo-American appellate courts.

CHARLES R. EPP is a graduate student in political science at the University of Wisconsin–Madison. His research interests include twentieth-century American legal thought, the history and structural characteristics of the U.S. legal system, and contemporary political theory.

JOHN HAGAN is Professor of Law, University of Toronto. His 1988 book Structural Criminology (Polity Press/Rutgers University Press) was honored in 1989 with the Distinguished Scholar Award from the Crime, Law, and Deviance Section of the American Sociological Association and the Outstanding Scholarship Award from the Crime and Delinquency Division of the Society for the Study of Social Problems. He is now working on theory and research related to the causes of and reactions to crime and delinquency and the advancement of men and women in the legal profession.

ROBERT A. KAGAN, is Professor of Political Science and Law at the University of California, Berkeley. He is author of Regulatory Justice: Going by the Book: The Problem of Regulatory Unreasonableness (with Eugene Bardach); and articles on U.S. courts, administrative law enforcement, and tax law compliance. His current work concerns the adversarial nature of the U.S. legal system, as discerned through environmental, labor, and liability laws and their impact on seaports in the United States and elsewhere.

MARK KESSLER is Assistant Professor of Political Science at Bates College. He is author of Legal Services for the Poor: A Comparative and Contemporary Analysis of Interorganizational Politics and articles on law and social change, legal culture, and organizational decisionmaking. He is currently investigating the gatekeeping role of private attorneys in civil dispute resolution.

FELICE J. LEVINE is Director of the Law and Social Science Program at the National Science Foundation. Since 1979 she has been a member of the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees of the Law and Society Association, serving as secretary from 1979 to 1983 and as president for 1987–89. Also she is currently on the Council of the Fund for Research on Dispute Resolution. She is co-editor and co-author of Law, Justice, and the Individual in Society: Psychological and Legal Issues. Her research interests include public attitudes and perceptions of law and justice, the dynamics underlying compliance, and legal socialization (including professional socialization).

2 ABOUT THE AUTHORS

MARLYNN L. MAY is Chair of the Department of Sociology and Professor at Beloit College, Beloit, Wisconsin. He is co-editor of Governing Through the Courts and is co-author of several articles on patient/physician disputing. In addition to continuing his research and writing on this topic, he is a practicing mediator and is developing opportunities for applying mediation in patient/physician conflict at the local community level.

JAMES F. SHORT is Professor of Sociology at Washington State University and the 1990 Beto Chair of Criminal Justice at Sam Houston State University. His most recent book is Delinquency and Society (Prentice-Hall, 1990). He served as editor of a special issue of Law & Policy devoted to "Social and Legal Aspects of Risk and Risk-related Behavior" (July 1989).

DANIEL B. STENGEL is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of Minnesota, Morris. He is currently engaged in researching the application of the methodology of cultural studies to the Anglo-American common law tradition.

MARK TUSHNET is Professor of Law at the Georgetown University Law Center. He is working on a biography of Thurgood Marshall. In 1988 he published Red, White, and Blue: A Critical Analysis of Constitutional Law.