The Journal of the College Theology Society

A Journal exploring developments in Catholic theology, the total Christian tradition, human religious experience, and the concerns of creative teaching from the college and university environment.

This issue of Horizons celebrates a fittingly double anniversary: the Fiftieth Anniversary of the College Theology Society and the Thirtieth Anniversary of Horizons. So, without naming names, this issue is dedicated to all those whose vision and effort brought the Society into being and have sustained it over the decades, and to those who have done the same for Horizons.

Our Articles by Joseph Bracken, Peter Hodgson, Edward Ulrich, and John Wall range from the Body of Christ and the Spirit to Christian ethics and then on to religious pluralism and comparative theology. I will leave the many possible connections to your creative reading.

Our group of Anniversary Essays includes contributions from some of the many special friends of the Society and Horizons. As his title suggests, Gerard Sloyan is our eye-witness to fifty years of CTS history. Of course, most of us know that he has been much more to the Society and Horizons than an observing eye-witness. Indeed, the very existence of the CTS and Horizons is a witness to his wisdom and devotion. Sandra Yocum Mize is the officially designated historian of the Society, and here she reflects on the writing of the History that she is currently completing. Bernard Cooke, Lawrence Cunningham, Charles Curran, Paul Knitter, and William Shea are well known to Horizons readers. Their essays' titles remind us of their many wonderful contributions over the decades to both the CTS and Horizons.

In our Review Symposium Elizabeth Johnson responds to reviews of her Truly Our Sister by Nancy Dallavalle, Terrence Tilley, Mary Ann Donovan, and Roger Haight. And our Review Essay by John Cavadini features the work of Jacques Dupuis and S. Mark Heim. Add reviews of thirty new books, and stir.
