

English Today

The International Review of the English Language

Teaching English in Turkmenistan

Will Chinese take over from English as the world's most important language?

- The use of English loan-words as slang on websites in Brazilian Portuguese
- An empirical perspective on West Virginia dialect variation
 - Prescriptive grammar blogs on the Internet
- Variation in V+the+N idioms
- Lexical traps in Hong Kong English
- Dying and killing: euphemisms in current English
- China's English mystery
- Defending Strunk and White

English Today

The International Review of the English Language

ET104 Volume 26 Number 4 December 2010

-
- 2 Comment: From Brazil and Turkmenistan to the mystery of English in China
- 3 The ET column: Will Chinese take over from English as the world's most important language? DAVID GRADDOL
- 5 To borrow or not to borrow: the use of English loanwords as slang on websites in Brazilian Portuguese
EDUARDO H. DINIZ DE FIGUEIREDO
- 13 Unvernacular Appalachia: an empirical perspective on West Virginia dialect variation KIRK HAZEN, PAIGE BUTCHER AND ASHLEY KING
- 23 Old wine online: prescriptive grammar blogs on the Internet DEBORAH SCHAFFER
- 29 Teaching English in Turkmenistan VALERIE SARTOR
- 37 Variation in V+the+N idioms MASSRURA MOSTAFA
- 44 Lexical traps in Hong Kong English JULIE M. GROVES AND HEI TAO CHAN
- 51 Dying and killing: euphemisms in current English
GERRY ABBOTT
- 53 China's English mystery – the views of a China 'foreign expert' MARTIN WOLFF
- 57 Defending Strunk and White MICHAEL BULLEY
- 63 Review: From Anzac to zack: a lexicographer looks at Australian English JAMES LAMBERT
-

 CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS