

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

BRUCE ARNOLD is an Assistant Professor of Sociology at the University of Calgary, Alberta, Canada. He is currently engaged in research on professional misconduct among lawyers, deviant careers, and professional self-regulatory powers.

GAYLE BINION is Associate Professor of Political Science and Chair of the Law & Society Program at the University of California at Santa Barbara. Her articles on law and equality across lines of gender, race, and class have been published in a variety of social science journals and law review. She is currently working on a feminist regrounding of constitutional law.

DAVID A. FORD is Associate Professor of Sociology at Indiana University–Indianapolis and Executive Program Coordinator of University Research Associates, Indianapolis. He is principal investigator for the Indianapolis Domestic Violence Prosecution Experiment. He currently directs a training project on family violence for Indiana law enforcement officers.

ROSEMARY GARTNER teaches in the Department of Sociology and the Faculty of Law at the University of Toronto. She continues her work with Bill McCarthy comparing trends in Canadian and U.S. homicide rates. In conjunction with the Women We Honour Action Committee, she is documenting the incidence and characteristics of intimate partner femicide in Ontario since 1974 and is collaborating with friends of some of the victims to tell these women's stories.

JANE GOODMAN is a lawyer and experimental psychologist. She practices employment law at Frank and Rosen in Seattle, Washington, and conducts research in the Psychology Department of the University of Washington. Her research interests include judgment and decisionmaking in the legal process, causal reasoning, and mediation.

EDITH GREENE is Associate Professor of Psychology at the University of Colorado. She has published articles on jury decision-making in complex litigation, the effects on jurors of pretrial publicity, juries' use of scientific evidence, and eyewitness memory. Her recent interests focus on jury determinations of damage awards in civil litigation. She recently co-authored a book with Franklin Strier, The Adversary System: An Annotated Bibliography.

JOHN HAGAN is President of the American Society of Criminology and Professor of Sociology and Law and Killam Research Fellow at the University of Toronto. His current research is on the professional and personal lives of lawyers and the causes and consequences of delinquency and crime in the life course. His book Structural Criminology (Polity and Rutgers University Press, 1989) received the Distinguished Scholar Award from the Crime, Law and Deviance section of the American Sociological Association and the Outstanding Scholarship Award from the Crime and Juvenile Delinquency Division of the Society for the Study of Social Problems.

LYNNE HENDERSON is a Professor of Law at Indiana University–Bloomington. Her current research involves feminist theory and criminal law and developing a critique of legal approaches to child sexual abuse.

FIONA KAY is a doctoral candidate in sociology at the University of Toronto. Her dissertation focuses on career dynamics within the legal profession. Her research interests include corporate and occupational crime, juvenile delinquency, deviance, and social control.

ELIZABETH F. LOFTUS is Professor of Psychology at the University of Washington. She received her Ph.D. from Stanford University. She is past president of the American Psychology-Law Society. Her research specialties include eyewitness testimony and jury decisionmaking.

BILL McCARTHY works in the Department of Sociology at the University of Victoria (British Columbia). His current research with Rosemary Gartner focuses on changes in homicide offending and victimization across time. He is also working with John Hagan on studies of adolescent homelessness and crime.

CARRIE MENKEL-MEADOW is Professor of Law at the University California, Los Angeles (UCLA), where she also served as Acting Director of the Center for the Study of Women. She has written extensively on gender theory, women in the legal profession, dispute processing and alternative dispute resolution, legal ethics, the delivery of legal services for the poor, and legal education. Her current research focuses on the sources of and impediments to the expression of altruism in law and legal institutions.

MARIAN MILLER is a doctoral student in clinical psychology at the University of Washington. Her interests include cross-cultural issues in mental health, with special emphasis on Asian Americans, community mental health, and stress and burnout in the human services professions.

SUSAN L. MILLER is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Sociology at Northern Illinois University. Her research interests include intimate violence, victimology, and theoretical and policy implications of gender, race, class, and crime. She is currently conducting empirical tests of social control and deterrence theories with a two-wave panel study. Her recent article on ramifications of mandatory arrest policies for battered women appeared in Criminal Justice Policy Review.

ELIZABETH RAPAPORT is Associate Professor of Public Policy at Duke University. Her current research interests include the law's understanding of violent crimes committed by and against women and capital punishment.

SALLY S. SIMPSON is an Assistant Professor at the Institute of Criminal Justice and Criminology, University of Maryland. Her research interests include corporate crime, criminological theory, and gender, race, and class influences on subjective perceptions and objective realities of criminal offending. She is the author of several articles in Criminology, Social Forces, and the American Sociological Review that address these issues and is currently at work on a book on corporate crime control.

ADELAIDE H. VILLMOARE is an Associate Professor of Political Science at Vassar College. She has written about ideology, the criminal justice system, and the state, and about critical approaches to rights. Her current research involves feminist theory, postmodern perspectives, rights, and women.

MARJORIE ZATZ is Associate Professor in the School of Justice Studies at Arizona State University. Her articles on racial and ethnic discrimination in court processing and sentencing have appeared in a variety of social science journals. Her current research is an NSF-funded analysis of social and legal change in Cuba and Nicaragua.