New African Histories

A new series from OHIO UNIVERSITY PRESS

Edited by Jean Allman & Allen Isaacman

New African Histories promotes research that boldly transgresses boundaries. We seek manuscripts that develop innovative, multidimensional, and multidisciplinary ways of understanding the meanings and makings of Africa's past by challenging the operative categories of the field—whether thematic (social, cultural, political, intellectual, gender), chronological (precolonial, colonial, postcolonial) or political (ethnic, national, regional).

Building directly on the important accomplishments of social history, the series charts new directions in the reconstruction of ordinary and extraordinary lives. Since the 1980s, historians have explored the histories and agency of people on the social and political margins whose past had been rendered invisible. Social histories of Africa have demonstrated the ways in which binary categories—of rulers/ruled, colonizers/colonized, resistance/collaboration, and male/female—deny the complexity of people's lives. More recently, social historians have shifted their angle of vision to explore both social practice and cultural discourse and have opened up the possibility of seeing consciousness and politics as parts of everyday experience.

This new series from OHIO UNIVERSITY PRESS is thus concerned with histories that push the boundaries of the "social"—histories that are embedded in political economies and ecosystems, contested in public memories, represented in cultural landscapes. The editors seek multivalent and textured discussions of the ways in which power relations permeate every dimension of social and cultural life. We seek contributions that are methodologically creative, theoretically adventurous, and intent upon developing alternative archives and new bodies of sources.

The editors invite submission of proposals that fit the definition of the series and push the boundaries of knowledge in new ways. We will publish monographs and occasional edited collections based on original research. All proposals should be submitted directly to the press c/o:

Africa South of the Sahara Second Edition A Geographical Interpretation Robert Stock

"An excellent introduction to sociocultural, political, economic, and environmental structures and processes in African geography. Stock's well-balanced text dispels persistent stereotypes about Africa south of the Sahara while offering a more realistic interpretation of the continent's contemporary problems, challenges, and opportunities. The second edition has been considerably enhanced by additional chapters and new case examples illustrating significant issues. This is essential reading for students, instructors, and policymakers with an interest in African progress."

—Assefa Mehretu, Michigan State University

"This second edition is not as good as its excellent predecessor—it's better! Stock's accessible yet challenging text now includes extended discussions of the physical environment, water resources, civil society, and children, and engages explicitly with postcolonial theory,"

—Mike Kesby, University of St. Andrews, Scotland

Now in an extensively revised and expanded second edition, this authoritative text provides a broad introduction to the geography of a rapidly changing region. Exploring contemporary issues without losing sight of their historical roots, the volume analyzes the sociocultural, political, economic, and environmental processes that shape resource use and development in Africa south of the Sahara. Readers gain a balanced view of the continent's trials and triumphs—from postcolonial political strife and the devastating impact of HIV/AIDS to current progress toward democratization and sustainable growth. The second edition includes expanded coverage of physical geography and new chapters on water resources, the social geography of African children, and Western perceptions of the continent.

BEYOND STRUCTURAL ADJUSTMENT

The Institutional Context of African Development

Edited by Nicolas van de Walle,
Nicole Ball and Vijaya Ramachandran

"This is a very useful and timely book. It provides us with an excellent overview of the salient issues on African development in the post-structural adjustment era. It will be required reading for those following development in Africa."

—Carol Lancaster, Georgetown University

The book starts with the premise that Africa's economic renewal will require moving beyond the narrow bounds of structural adjustment reform and promoting the greater effectiveness of the region's public institutions. Economic reform will not be successful unless the central states in the region develop more productive relationships with the other institutions that inevitably condition economic relations and the context in which development takes place. This institutional debate is particularly important because the recent democratization of African public life has resulted in a rapidly evolving institutional landscape, with the emergence of significant new actors. Each of the chapters in this book examines these relationships and attempts to define the appropriate developmental role of the different institutions that can play a prominent role in Africa's economic future.

RIP IT UP

The Black Experience in Rock 'n Roll

Edited by Kandia Crazy Horse

Collecting the stories of Jimi Hendrix, Arthur Lee and Love, Prince, the punk band Bad Brains, and more obscure black members of "white" bands, it becomes clear that the true story of blacks in rock has remained largely untold for far too long. This is essential reading for any rock fan, presenting the history of rock from an angle unseen until now.
