About the Authors

John Brigham is Professor of Political Science at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst; a Fellow of the international Institute for the Sociology of Law in Oñati, Spain; and a founding member of the Amherst Seminar. He is the author of Constitutional Language (1978), The Cult of the Court (1987), other books, and articles in various journals. His current research examines territory occupied by the United States and the forms law takes in American politics.

Marianne Constable, Associate Professor of Rhetoric at the University of California at Berkeley, is the author of The Law of the Other: Changing Conceptions of Citizenship, Law, and Knowledge (University of Chicago Press, 1994). She has published articles on Foucault and law, Nietzsche and jurisprudence, and other topics in law and social theory. She is working on a book on silence, speech, and judgment in modern American law and politics.

Nancy Cook has been in legal education for 15 years and currently teaches in the legal aid program at Cornell Law School. In addition to a J.D. degree from Georgetown University, she has a M.F.A. in creative writing from American University. Her publications include stories, essays, and articles that explore the intersections of law, culture, and human drama. In her clinical work, she is focusing on the development of programs in which lawyers and law students contribute to interdisciplinary problemsolving work in community settings.

Rosemary J. Coombe is Associate Professor of Law at the University of Toronto. She is currently a Visiting Scholar at the American Bar Foundation. Her research focuses on issues of law and culture, with recent emphasis on the politics of intellectual property protections. Her book Cultural Appropriations: Authorship, Alterity and the Law is forthcoming from Routledge in its "After the Law" series.

Bryant Garth is Director of the American Bar Foundation. Prior to joining the ABF in 1990, he was Dean of the Indiana University School of Law-Bloomington. His current research interests include the internationalization of legal practice, concentrating on trade and human rights, and the role of legal education in the United States. He and Yves Dezalay have recently completed Dealing with Virtue:

Law & Society Review, Volume 29, Number 4 (1995) © 1995 by The Law and Society Association. All rights reserved. International Commercial Arbitration and the Construction of International Private Justice (University of Chicago Press, forthcoming).

Mark Kessler is Associate Professor and Chair of Political Science at Bates College. He is the author of Legal Services for the Poor (1987), co-author of The Play of Power (1995), and has published articles on law and social change, legal mobilization, legal culture, and law as cultural practice. His current research examines conceptions of political community in legal discourse.

Tina Loo is Associate Professor in the Department of History, Simon Fraser University, in Burnaby, British Columbia. She is the author of Making the Law, Order, and Authority in British Columbia, 1821–1871 (1994) and has written on aboriginal peoples and the law. Currently, she is doing research on capital punishment and is, with Carolyn Strange, writing a book on moral regulation in late 19th- and early 20th-century Canada.

Gregory M. Matoesian is Assistant Professor in the Department of Criminal Justice at the University of Illinois at Chicago. His research interests include the study of language use in the trial context and critical social theory. He is currently examining the Kennedy Smith rape trial. His most recent book is Reproducing Rape: Domination through Talk in the Courtroom (University of Chicago Press, 1993).

Francine Sanders is an Assistant Professor at Middle Tennessee State University. Her research interests include the effects of institutional variables on policy outputs and the connections between American institutions and the public. She has written about congressional elections and the dynamics of legislating civil rights policies in the U.S. House of Representatives.

Boaventura de Sousa Santos is Professor of Sociology at the University of Coimbra and has been Visiting Professor at the London School of Economics, the University of São Paulo, and the University of Wisconsin–Madison. He has written extensively on legal pluralism, state theory, the use of law in social struggles and social movements, postmodern legality and epistemology. His most recent books: Pela Mão: o social e o político na pós-modernidade (Porto: Afrontamento, 1994), and Toward a New Common Sense: Law, Science, and Politics in the paradigmatic Transition (New York: Routledge, 1995).

Austin Sarat is William Nelson Cromwell Professor of Jurisprudence & Political Science at Amherst College. He is author (with William Felstiner) of Divorce Lawyers and Their Clients: Power and Meaning in the Legal Process, and co-editor (with Thomas Kearns) of Law in Everyday Life, The Rhetoric of Law, and Identities, Politics, and Rights. He is co-editor (with Susan Silbey) of Studies in Law, Politics, & Society and of the Series on Law, Meaning & Violence published by the University of Michigan Press (with Martha Minow and Michael Ryan). Recent publications include articles in Law & Society Review, Law and Social Inquiry, and Social and Legal Studies. His current research focuses on moral commitment and professional identity, the relationship of law and violence in the context of capital punishment, and the legal ideology of the welfare poor. During 1995–96 he is working on a book on the death penalty bar, tentatively titled Lawyers for the Condemned.

Jonathan Simon teaches at the University of Miami Law School. His current work concerns the evolution of strategies for governing urban life in an age of globalization.

Carolyn Strange is an Assistant Professor at the Centre of Criminology, University of Toronto. A historian by training, she has written on the history of gender and moral regulation in Canada. The author of Toronto's Girl Problem: The Perils and Pleasure of the City, 1880–1930, she is currently working with Tina Loo on a book about the history of law and morality in Canada, tentatively entitled "Making Good."

Jerry Van Hoy is Assistant Professor of Sociology at Purdue University. His interests include the political economy of legal/professional organization and the nature of professional work in various market and cultural settings. He is currently studying the work practices of personal injury lawyers in Indiana.