Educational Studies

A Quarterly Journal
in the Foundations of Education

Since it began in 1970, Educational Studies has published more reviews of education books than any other educational journal in the same time period.

If you didn't read Educational Studies last year, you missed articles about John Holt, Jerry Rubin, Jonathan Kozol, school reform, the teachers union movement, the state of education as a discipline, educational policy and the social sciences, Rom (Gypsies), ethology, Swedish and American bilingual education. You also missed reviews of 90 books and films, including Felix Greene's film 8 or 9 in the Morning (about education in mainland China).

Don't miss Educational Studies for 1977. More than 100 book and film reviews! Articles and essays by foundations scholars and leading educational figures. Over 400 pages of current educational information.

Annual subscription rates: $8.50—individual; $15—institutional.

For subscriptions write:

The One Best System

A History of American Urban Education

David B. Tyack

"This brilliant and readable book opens a variety of new perspectives on the development of public education in this country . . . Tyack does the most responsible, nonsentimental social history yet seen, and I think it highly likely that readers will find themselves educated, enlarged, and excited by what he says."—Maxine Greene, Today's Education

"A most valuable book for our time. Tyack enables us to stand back, take a deep breath, and review where we have been and how far we have come. In fact, The One Best System is the one best account we have of our urban educational past."—Stanley K. Schultz, Harvard Educational Review

This major new interpretation of the American educational system traces the development of urban education in the light of the most recent work in history, sociology, and political science. A superb base for analyzing the evolution of modern institutional structures, power relationships, and ideologies.
