Court Affirms Public Access to Nixon Papers

A three-judge Federal Appeals court panel unanimously rejected on April 12 the Justice Department's Office of Legal Counsel's 1986 claim that the National Archives must automatically defer to any claim of executive privilege by former President Richard M. Nixon in deciding access to presidential papers. According to the Justice Department's memorandum, the automatic executive privilege deferral could only be set aside if it was specifically rejected by the sitting president.

The court affirmed that the National Archives had the authority to rule on executive privilege claims in response to a suit brought by Ralph Nader's public interest group, Public Citizen. The suit was the latest round in a protracted legal struggle to secure public access to historical materials of the Nixon administration. The APSA was an early participant in the legal challenges to the 1974 agreement between President Nixon and Arthur F. Sampson, Administrator of the General Services Administration, an agreement that would have allowed President Nixon to destroy the 880 tape recordings seized by Congress during the Watergate hearings.
