

should they lose their right to decide on euthanasia or assisted suicide whenever the jurisdiction allows it. However, there is a growing concern of older people being coerced into decisions about ending their lives, not least due to their own fears of becoming a burden both for their families and the society. Manuel Martín-Carrasco will analyze how ageism can influence or model a wish to die in elderly people, especially those living with greater physical and/or mental disability. The so-called rational suicide focuses on the possibility that a healthy subject eventually decides to end his own life as a reflex of a free decision, and not within the context of a mental illness. Manuel Sánchez-Perez will discuss how difficulties in assessing the rationality of suicidal ideation include its dimensional character, together with the evidence that rationality is not always absent in depression and that the absence of depression does not imply rationality. Next, Lia Fernandes will provide an overview of years of public and parliamentary debates on euthanasia and physician-assisted suicide in Portugal. She will focus on issues regarding the exact role of psychiatrists (old age psychiatrists in particular) in the decision process, as proposed by the recently approved legislation. Finally, Javier Olivera will provide a brief overview of the recent implementation of legal access to euthanasia in Spain. A discussion of several controversial aspects of the operationalization of such a complex process will follow, including those related with conscientious objection.

Euthanasia and Ageism

Manuel Martín-Carrasco

It is clear that old people do not necessarily lose their autonomy as they age and nor should they lose their rights to make their own decisions, including the right to request euthanasia or assisted suicide, if the Law of the jurisdiction allows it. However, there are also vulnerable elderly and there is a concern that frail older people could be coerced into ending their lives because of their fears about being a burden on either their family or society. This presentation analyses how ageism can influence the formation of the desire to die in the elderly, especially in those of greater physical and/or mental frailty

Suicide and rationality

Manuel Sánchez-Perez

The so-called rational suicide focuses on the possibility that a healthy subject can make the determination to end his life in the absence of conditions on his freedom of decision, as in the context of a mental illness. Difficulties in assessing the rationality of suicidal ideation include its dimensional character and the evidence that rationality is not always absent in depression and the absence of depression does not always implies rationality.
