
About the Authors

Susan Coutin is Assistant Professor of Anthropology at North Adams State College. She has studied human rights abuses in Argentina during the last period of military rule, efforts to aid Salvadoran and Guatemalan refugees in the United States, and the 1985–96 trial of sanctuary activists on alien-smuggling charges. Her book The Culture of Protest: Religious Activism and the U.S. Sanctuary Movement was published in 1993. She is now doing research on the ways that Salvadoran immigrants in Southern California seek to define their legal and social identities.

Jo Dixon is Assistant Professor in the Department of Sociology and the Institute for Law and Society at New York University. She has written extensively on gun ownership, violence, and the role of race and gender in the allocation of rewards and punishments in society. She is currently conducting research on the politics of individual, collective, and state resistance to domestic assault.

David Theo Goldberg is Chair and Professor of Justice Studies, and Professor in the Ph.D. Program in Communication Studies, Arizona State University. He is the author of Racist Culture: Philosophy and the Politics of Meaning (Basil Blackwell) and Ethical and Social Issues (2d ed.). He is the editor of Multiculturalism: A Critical Reader (Basil Blackwell) and Anatomy of Racism (University of Minnesota Press), and co-editor (with Michael Krausz) of Jewish Identity (Temple University) and (with Abebe Zegeye) of Social Identities: A Journal for the Study of Race, Nation and Culture (Carfax). He is currently working on a book on the racial state.

Chee Ruey Hsieh is an Associate Research Fellow at the Institute of Economics, Academia Sinica, Taipei, Taiwan. His major research focuses on health economics. His current research interests are on consumer health behavior and the connection between education and health; the demand for long-term care and the economic status of the elderly; and issues related to health-sector financing and national health insurance systems.

Weidong Ji is Associate Professor of Legal Theory and History, Law and Policy at the Faculty of Law, Kobe University, and an Adjunct Professor at the Institute of Law at the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, Peoples' Republic of China. His research interests include sociological theory of law, comparative studies in Asian law and society, dispute resolution, and the legal profession. He was given the Top Award of Chinese Legal Treatises and co-authored The Sociology of Law (China, 1988). His most recent work includes Dynamics of Law: Principles of Chinese Social Order and Transformation (forthcoming in Japan).

Jefferey M. Sellers teaches comparative politics and comparative public policy at the Humboldt University in Berlin. His current research focuses on regional and local political economies of postindustrial development in Europe and North America, on the application of democratic theory to the study of public policy, and on postcommunist transformations in central Europe.

Carroll Seron is a Professor in the School of Public Affairs at Baruch College and the Department of Sociology at the Graduate Center, City University of New York. She is the author of numerous articles on courts and the legal profession, including the forthcoming book The Business of Practicing Law: The Work Lives of Solo and Small-Firm Attorneys (Philadelphia: Temple University Press).

Frank A. Sloan is J. Alexander McMahon Professor of Health Policy and Management and Professor of Economics at Duke University. Before coming to Duke in 1993, he held positions at the RAND Corporation, University of Florida, and Vanderbilt University. He has written extensively on medical malpractice, including, in addition to several journal articles, Insuring Medical Malpractice (Oxford University Press, 1991, co-authored with R. Bovbjerg and P. Githens) and Suing for Medical Malpractice (University of Chicago Press, 1993, co-authored with several scholars at Vanderbilt University). He has recently begun a study of dram shop liability. His other current interests include the economics of aging.

Kent W. Smith is a Senior Research Fellow at the American Bar Foundation. His research for the past several years has focused on tax compliance and administration. With his collaborators, Loretta Stalans, Karyl Kinsey, and Robert Mason, he is currently completing the analysis of data on several aspects of income tax audits. He is also in the early stages of research on the nexus between a globalized economy and polity-based taxation and regulation.