

previous issue of PS, we incorrectly stated that Stanton was affiliated with Stanford University.)

Patricia Sykes, University of Massachusetts at Amherst, has been named a Lilly Teaching Fellow for the 1987-88 academic year.

Michael D. Ward, professor of political science, University of Colorado, Boulder, has received the Karl Deutsch Award of the International Studies Association.

Marvin Weinbaum, of the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, received a Burlington Northern Foundation Faculty Achievement Award for 1987.

Thomas C. Wiegale has been named Presidential Research Professor at Northern Illinois University.

In Memoriam

William N. Chambers

William N. Chambers, professor emeritus at Washington University, died June 5 after a long illness. He was 70 years old.

Bill Chambers did his undergraduate work at Harvard and received his Ph.D. from Washington University in 1949. For much of his career he devoted his scholarly attention to the role of political parties in democratic society, and was an influential contributor to both theory and substantive research on the origins and growth of political parties in the United States.

His first major book was a political biography of Senator Thomas Hart Benton, and thereafter he wrote extensively on party development, focusing especially on the Democratic Party. His Political Parties in a New Nation (1963) was widely admired, and The American Party Systems (edited with W. D. Burnham, 1967) quickly came to be seen as a landmark for both historians and political scientists.

Bill Chambers was an exceptionally broad-gauged scholar with wide-ranging interests and enthusiasm for bringing historically grounded investigation into theoretically informed focus. He was an active member of the Washington University Department of Political Science until 1965 when he accepted the Chair of the Department of History. Whatever his department might be, however, he worked closely with students and colleagues of diverse disciplinary perspectives.

In 1975 Bill was forced into early retirement by Alzheimer's disease. He is survived by his wife, Susan, three children and three grandchildren.

Robert H. Salisbury
Washington University, St. Louis

Manning J. Dauer

Manning J. Dauer was a distinguished service professor emeritus in the department of political science at the University of Florida, where he began his teaching career in 1930. Leaving to obtain his Ph.D. at the University of Illinois, he returned to Florida as a faculty member in 1933 and remained until his retirement in 1980, except for service in the U.S. Army Air Corps during World War II. He was the first chairman of the department of political science and served in that position from 1950 through 1975. He died on January 11, 1987.

Always acknowledged for his leadership at the University of Florida, Dauer also had an important impact on the state of Florida. From the thousands of students he taught came senators, congressmen, federal and state judges, governors, state legislators, state cabinet officers, business and professional leaders. The U.S. Supreme Court used his scholarly research in decisions on malapportionment. He served as an advisor to many state administrations and had a major role in drafting Florida's pioneering "government in the sunshine" law.

Dauer remained an active scholar with primary interests in political theory and American politics. His first book, The Adams Federalists, is still the definitive study of that subject. His extensive scholarship included several other books, chapters in books, and fifty articles in professional journals. He served as vice-president of the American Political Sci-