ELITE ACCOMMODATION IN CANADIAN POLITICS

Robert Presthus

The first volume in a two-volume study of interest group behaviour in Canada and the United States. This volume presents the most comprehensive analysis to date on the structure of interest groups in Canada, and the nature of their interactions and influence vis-à-vis government. Based on a four-year study of 1,200 executives, legislators, and civil servants.

The work deals with the Canadian political process at two levels of analysis, one related to the structure and political behaviour of interest groups as seen from a detailed survey perspective, the other a setting of the interest group phenomenon within the larger framework of the Canadian social system, its political institutions and culture.

ROBERT PRESTHUS is University Professor, Department of Political Science, York University, and is well known as the author of previous distinguished contributions to political sociology.
