

Attention all students and scholars of medieval studies ...

... have you discovered Early Medieval Europe?

Early Medieval Europe is an exciting new journal featuring the latest, liveliest scholarly debate on the history of Europe, including the British Isles, from the fourth to the eleventh century.

Launched in Autumn 1992, it is the only journal which meets the increasing demand for an interdisciplinary forum in this field.

Although the focus is historical, a wide range of sources, methods and disciplines - archaeological, numismatic, palaeographical, diplomatic, literary, onomastic, art historical, linguistic and epigraphical - are explored.

Each issue of Early Medieval Europe includes articles covering the latest research developments in the field; book reviews; and a noticeboard of forthcoming events.

A Study in Religious Change

Dennis Nineham

As support for his theory that religion changes in response to cultural change, Dennis Nineham has made an in-depth study of tenth-century Frankish society, producing a fascinating picture of a world which seems light-years away from ours and provoking deep questions about the nature of Christianity.
