Fodor, special lecturer in international relations, has become a full-time member of the staff of the Chicago Sun. Professor John Day Larkin is serving in the Chicago area as Special Mediation Representative for the War Labor Board.

An institute on World Organization, held at the American University September 14–18, was attended by some one hundred sixty persons. The lectures are to be published in book form.

As a contribution to an understanding of the war effort, the University of Washington political science department is offering a seminar on War-

Time Administration. Unusual features include the presence of official personnel from the agencies under discussion and the use of the facilities of the Bureau of Governmental Research to enable the staff to keep abreast of latest developments.

In cooperation with the National Archives, the School of Social Sciences and Public Affairs of the American University is offering an integrated program in records and archives administration, intended to serve the needs of those responsible for records both in the file rooms of government agencies and in archival establishments. The program consists of a basic course for undergraduates in the management of records, both current and non-current, and a number of advanced courses on more specialized phases of the subject.

The sixty-second annual meeting of the Academy of Political Science, held at the Hotel Astor, New York City, November 10, was devoted to three general topics, as follows: "The War of Distances," "The Armed Forces—Their Movement and Supply," and "The United Nations."

Internship Training in Government Administration at Washington. A seventh group of government interns is now in Washington engaged in administrative training under the auspices of the National Institute of Public Affairs. Following an orientation of approximately a month, the twenty-four men and eighteen women were placed in more than a score of government agencies, where they are performing practical assignments under the supervision of federal officials. They are meeting once a week for discussions with men prominent in public affairs, are taking courses after hours at the American and George Washington Universities, and are being given tutorial supervision by the staff of the Institute. Unlike the former students, the present group started on July 1 (instead of in September), and their schedule has been changed so as to take only seven months rather than the customary nine. Basically, the internship program remains much the same; and the 1943 competition was announced in November.

What has happened to the past six groups of interns? A survey of the 229 graduates of the National Institute's program has just been completed. Almost all interns have gone into government service, and with the nation converting to war there has been a corresponding "conversion" in their activities. Half of the men already are in the armed services, and of the remaining interns, half are in civilian war agencies.

There are 106 former interns in the various civilian services of the federal government. Eight of this group are in foreign service outside the United States, six with the State Department in Latin American countries working as vice consuls or economic analysts, and two with the Panama
