

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

EDWARD N. BEISER is Associate Professor of Political Science at Brown University. His fields of interest include public law — judicial behavior, American politics, and civil liberties. His previous publications have appeared in the Law and Society Review, the American Political Science Review, Polity, the Journal of Public Law, and the Vanderbilt Law Review, among others. He is currently engaged in a study of the composition of juries in state and federal courts in Rhode Island.

JAY HALL left academia in 1969 and is now with Teleometrics International, a firm which publishes behavioral science materials and serves as a consultant on organizational development. He holds a doctorate in social psychology and has written widely in social science fields. Among his recent articles was "Decisions, Decisions, Decisions," which appeared in Psychology Today (Oct., 1971).

MICHAEL V. HASELSWERDT is a Ph.D. candidate at Michigan State University. His major areas of interest are political parties, voting behavior, and formal theory.

KALMAN J. KAPLAN is associated with the Department of Psychology at Wayne State University. During the 1970-72 academic years he has been engaged in a research project on "Attitude Gradient Structures and Their Directional and Evaluative Implications," under a grant from the National Science Foundation. During the next two academic years he will be conducting another study funded by NSF, entitled "Attitude Gradients, Distance Equilibrium Ethnicity and Inter-Neighbor Contact: Extension of a Laboratory Paradigm." He has published a number articles and presented papers to meetings of regional and national professional associations.

RICHARD LEMPert is Associate Professor of Law at the University of Michigan Law School. During 1971-72 he was a Russell Sage Fellow and Lecturer in Law at the Yale Law School. One of his articles appeared in Vol. 1, No. 1 of the Law and Society Review and he has also published in the American Sociological Review and the Journal of Legal Education. He has taught in the field of administrative law and also has an interest in the sociology of law and evidence.

DAVID B. MELTZ is Assistant Professor of Political Science at Michigan State University. His areas of interest are rational choice models of political processes, theories of legislative choice, and issues in the philosophy of science. Two forthcoming articles will appear in the Journal of Politics and in Behavioral Science.

GREGORY RATHJEN is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of Kentucky. His major interests are judicial process and behavior, with special emphasis on the application of rational-calculus theories to the study of the Supreme Court.

PAUL E. ROBERTS is Assistant Professor of Economics at the University of Florida and Director of the Master of Business Administration Program in the College of Business Administration at the same institution. His articles have appeared in Economic Development and Cultural Change and Business and Economic Dimensions. He has written for the Florida Defenders of the Environment and served as an expert witness for the Environmental Defense Fund in three important cases brought by the Fund against the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

WALTER A. ROSENBAUM is Associate Professor of Political Science at the University of Florida. His special fields include American political parties, the presidency, and public opinion. He has published articles in political science journals and is the co-author of a book on Public Opinion and Political Behavior (Wadsworth, 1966; second ed. 1970) and another on Analysing American Politics: A New Perspective (Wadsworth, 1971). In 1973 Praeger will publish his book on Environmental Politics. He is also co-author of a forth-coming book entitled Recreating Urban Government, to be published in 1973 by the University of Florida Press.

ROGER I. SIMON is Assistant Professor in the Department of Educational Administration, Ontario Institute for Studies in Education. He is currently engaged in research on the teacher selection process and has recently completed a study of instruction in the principles of clinical diagnosis. His articles have appeared in professional journals and books and he has served as a consultant in teacher education and curriculum development.

HAROLD J. SPAETH is Professor of Political Science at Michigan State University. He has published widely in the fields of judicial process and behavior, computer technology, measurement, and attitude theory. He writes a syndicated newspaper column, "The Supreme Court Computer," in which he uses theory and methodology to predict and explain the outcome and votes of U.S. Supreme Court decisions. His books include

The Warren Court (Chandler, 1966) and An Introduction to Supreme Court Decision Making (revised ed. Chandler, 1972).

MARTHA WILLIAMS is Associate Professor, Graduate School of Social Work, University of Texas at Austin. She is a frequent participant in workshops and institutes for a wide range of organizations at both the state and national levels and has also served as consultant to many government and professional groups. She is the author of a number of monographs and reports as well as journal articles and served as co-editor of Readings in Correctional Change (Hogg Foundation for Mental Health, 1970).

SUSAN O. WHITE is Assistant Professor in the Department of Political Science, University of New Hampshire. Her fields are public law, political theory, and political behavior. She is currently engaged in a study of small-group simulation of jury behavior and a longitudinal project on the socialization of police recruits. Another current interest is the evaluation of Law Enforcement Assistance Administration programs and she is involved in training state and local LEAA staff in evaluation research. She is co-author of Judicial Process and Constitutional Law: A Laboratory Manual (Little, Brown, 1972) and co-editor of Compliance and the Law: A Multidisciplinary Approach (Sage Publications, 1972).