
About the Authors

James R. Acker is the Associate Dean and an Assistant Professor at the School of Criminal Justice, State University of New York, Albany. He earned his J.D. at Duke Law School and received his Ph.D. from the University at Albany. His principal research interests include capital punishment and the judicial use of social science research evidence. He has recently published articles in the Vanderbilt Law Review, Law and Human Behavior, Law & Policy, and Justice Quarterly.

Richard A. Berk is a member of the University of California, Los Angeles, Department of Sociology and Program of Social Statistics, and is also the Director of the UCLA Center for the Study of the Environment and Society. He is a fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, former Vice Chair of the Board of Directors of the Social Science Research Council, and former Chair of the Methodology Section of the American Sociological Association. His research and teaching interests include applied statistics, criminal justice, and the environment.

John Charles Boger is an Associate Professor of Law at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. From 1978 through 1990, he was an associate counsel with the NAACP Legal Defense & Educational Fund, Inc. He directed LDF's Capital Punishment Project for six years, representing scores of capital defendants in state and federal habeas corpus cases and arguing dozens of capital cases before federal and state courts. He has lectured on capital punishment law at Harvard, Iowa, Florida State, and New York Law School.

William Bowers is Principal Research Scientist in the College of Criminal Justice and former Director of the Center for Applied Social Research at Northeastern University. He is author of Executions in America (1974) and Legal Homicide (1984) and is director of the Capital Jury Project, a 13-state study of how jurors in capital cases make their sentencing decisions.

John Braithwaite is a Professor in the Research School of Social Sciences, Australian National University. He is an author of Not Just Deserts: A Republican Theory of Criminal Justice (with Philip Pettit) and Responsive Regulation: Transcending the Deregulation Debate (with Ian Ayres).

Robert M. Emerson is Professor of Sociology at the University of California, Los Angeles. He has written extensively on ethnographic and field research methods and has published a number of articles that rely on qualitative research to examine social control decision-making across a variety of settings.

Norman J. Finkel is Professor of Psychology at Georgetown University. He is the author of Insanity on Trial and articles on how jurors construe insanity. His current research interests center on “community sentiment” in Eighth Amendment cases such as felony-murder and the juvenile death penalty and in regard to questions of privacy involving the right to die and euthanasia. He is working on a book, On Common Sense Justice, about where community sentiment and black-letter law depart.

Wayne Gray is an Associate Professor of Economics at Clark University and a Research Associate at the National Bureau of Economic Research. His research interests include the effectiveness of OSHA and EPA enforcement and the economic impacts of government regulation. He is currently a Census Fellow in Washington, studying the impact of environmental regulation on manufacturing productivity.

Bridget M. Hutter is a Research Fellow at the Centre for Socio-Legal Studies and Senior Research Fellow in Sociology at Jesus College, University of Oxford. She is author of The Reasonable Arm of the Law? and numerous articles about regulatory enforcement. She is working on a research monograph on the subject of compliance (Compliance: Interpretation and Variation in Health and Safety and Environmental Regulation). Her recent research has addressed the impact of health and safety regulations on the railway industry in Britain, and she is planning a project to examine the impact of environmental regulation on industry.

Raymond Paternoster is Professor at the Institute of Criminal Justice and Criminology, University of Maryland. He has conducted research on racial discrimination and capriciousness in the imposition of capital punishment. In addition, he is interested in empirical tests of social control and deterrence theories.

Austin Sarat is William Nelson Cromwell Professor of Jurisprudence and Political Science at Amherst College where he is co-founder of the College’s new Department of Law, Jurisprudence, and Social Thought. He co-edits the Amherst Series in Law, Jurisprudence and Social Thought and the Series on Law, Meaning and Violence (both published by the University of Michigan Press). With Susan Silbey he edits Studies in Law, Politics, and Society. He has recently published The Fate of Law, Law’s Violence, and Law in Everyday Life. His research focuses on the impact of violence on law and includes studies of capital trials, lawyers who represent persons condemned to death, and jurors in capital cases. In addition, he is conducting research on the legal ideologies of welfare workers and recipients.

John T. Scholz, Professor of Political Science at the State University of New York at Stony Brook, has written on many aspects of enforcement and compliance in democracies, focusing primarily on regulatory and tax policies. He is currently finishing The American Taxpayer: Greed, Duty, and Democracy as a visiting scholar at the Russell Sage Foundation and is working on a project assessing democratic controls over enforcement activities of the Internal Revenue Service for the period 1960–90.

Stefanie F. Smith is a recent graduate of Georgetown University, earning her B.A. in Psychology. She has published in the area of embarrassment, prototypes, and dramaturgic theory, and is currently doing research on community sentiment and the juvenile death penalty.

Robert Weiss is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Biostatistics at University of California, Los Angeles, School of Public Health. His current research interests include sensitivity analysis, graphics, Bayesian data analysis, and repeated measures analysis.

Franklin E. Zimring is Warren G. Simon Professor of Law at the University of California, Berkeley, and the Director of the Earl Warren Legal Institute.