

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

JOHN E. BERECOCHEA is a researcher with the Center for the Study of Law and Society at the University of California, Berkeley, and with Social Issues Research Associates (also in Berkeley). His major interests are in program outcomes, decision-making processes, and the history of adult prison and parole systems.

RICHARD A. BERK is Professor of Sociology at the University of California, Santa Barbara. His most recent books include Money, Work and Crime: Experimental Evidence, written with Peter H. Rossi and Kenneth J. Lenihan (Academic Press, 1980), and Water Shortage: Lessons in Conservation from the Great California Drought, written with Thomas F. Cooley, C.J. LaCivita, and Katherine Sredl (Abt Books, 1981). He is currently involved in research on different aspects of the criminal justice system.

SHELDON L. MESSINGER is Professor of Law at the University of California, Berkeley. A sociologist, he teaches in the Law School's Ph.D. program in Jurisprudence and Social Policy, as well as Berkeley's undergraduate Legal Studies Program. His main scholarly interest is in the development and control of coercive institutions.

RICHARD E. MILLER is a graduate student in Sociology at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. He is completing a dissertation on determinants of the origins, processing, and outcomes of civil disputes.

MICHAEL PHILIPS is Associate Professor of Philosophy at Portland State University. He has written on a variety of topics in ethics, applied ethics, and the philosophy of law.

CHARLES PRUITT received his Ph.D. in Political Science from Harvard University and is now Senior Political Consultant at A.B. Data, Ltd.

DAVID RAUMA is Assistant Professor of Sociology at the University of Michigan. His recent work has dealt with long-term trends in the use of imprisonment, the role of financial aid in the post-prison adjustment of ex-offenders, and the processing of domestic violence offenders within the criminal justice system.

LUIS SALAS is Associate Professor of Criminal Justice at Florida International University. He has published one book and a number of articles on crime and the judicial response in Latin American countries.

ALAN WERTHEIMER is Professor and Chairman of Political Science at the University of Vermont. He has published articles in political philosophy and philosophy of law.

JAMES Q. WILSON is the Henry Lee Shattuck Professor of Government at Harvard University. He is the author of Thinking About Crime and has published numerous articles on different aspects of the law enforcement process.