Existentialism and Euripides: Sickness, Tragedy and Divinity in the Medea, the Hippolytus and the Bacchae, by W. Sale (Ramus Monographs 1, 1977).

An examination of what are probably Euripides' three best known plays in the light of theories developed in existential psychoanalysis. This is a profoundly humane study that brings out Euripides' insight into the psychology of human beings and into the gods and demons with which they people their world.

Horace's Lyric Poetry: The Force of Humour, by Peter Connor (Ramus Monographs 2, 1987).

The author sees humour in Horace as 'a positive force of, and in, his engagement with the several ideas and attitudes he explores'. Far from being peripheral or tangential, humour functions as an integral element in the Odes; this analysis of its place in the total experience of reading these poems significantly enhances our perception of the quality of Horace's achievement.

Tragic Aporia: A Study of Euripides' Iphigenia at Aulis, by C.A.E. Luschnig (Ramus Monographs 3, 1988).

The self-consciously literary nature of this tragedy is well brought out in this study. Aporia in its widest sense, the gulf that exists between myth and reality, is shown to be the unifying element in the play; the only way to bridge this gulf is through the medium of art. Iphigenia's choice, which sets up an ending as startling as any in Euripides, is revealed as ultimately an aesthetic one.

Ovid and the Monuments: A Poet's Rome, by A.J. Boyle (Ramus Monographs 4, 2003).

This book examines the representation of the monuments of the city of Rome by the last of the great Augustan poets, Ovid, who was himself banished from Rome's urban spaces. All Ovid's descriptions of the city's monuments are presented, translated and analysed within a coherent topographical framework. A literary and historical introduction and detailed literary, historical and cultural commentary focus not only on 'factual' matters pertaining to the buildings themselves but on the larger issues of cultural identity, the ideology of place, and poetic and political power. From Ovid's text the physical city emerges both as the embodiment and monumentalisation of past and present and as the site of an intense ideological struggle over the meaning of romanitas or 'Roman-ness'.
