

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

MARCOS AGUILA is an economist and historian, and holds a position at Universidad Autónoma Metropolitana, unidad Xochimilco, in Mexico City. He received his PhD in History at the University of Texas at Austin, and has written articles on contemporary Mexican wages, wages in Mexico during the Great Depression and nineteenth-century Mexican liberalism.

JORGE BALÁN is Senior Program Officer for Education and Scholarship at the Ford Foundation in New York and Adjunct Professor of Sociology at New York University. Before joining Ford in 1998, he was senior researcher and ex-Director of the Centro de Estudios de Estado y Sociedad and Professor at the University of Buenos Aires. He has published extensively on issues of internal and international migration, urbanization and labor mobility, and the new professions. In recent years his research on the reform of higher education in the region has appeared in many journals and edited volumes, including Políticas de reforma de la educación superior y la universidad latinoamericana hacia el final del milenio, published by UNAM in 2000.

MARCELO S. BERGMAN is Professor at the Centro de Investigación y Docencia Económica (CIDE) in Mexico City. His research focuses in two major lines: tax evasion and law abidance, and public security and criminality, both in Latin America. His latest works are two forthcoming books: Cheaters, Suckers and Legalists: On Tax Evasion in Latin America and Law and Trust in Latin America.

JEFFREY BORTZ published his early wage studies (1985, 1986, 1988) in Mexico City, where he worked for a number of years. He currently teaches at Appalachian State University in North Carolina. His research on textile workers and the Mexican revolution has appeared in Labor History, the Journal of Latin American Studies, the International Review of Social History, the Americas, and other journals. He recently edited a volume with Stephen Haber on the Mexican economy (Stanford University Press, 2002).

DEBORAH COHN is Associate Professor of Spanish and Portuguese at Indiana University, Bloomington. Her book, History and Memory in the Two Souths: Recent Southern and Spanish American Fiction, was published by Vanderbilt UP in 1999. She is also co-editor, with Jon Smith, of Look Away!: The U.S. South in New World Studies (Duke University Press, 2004). She has published articles in CR: The New Centennial Review, Latin American Literary Review, Mexican Studies, and elsewhere. She currently holds an NEH grant for work on a project entitled "Creating the Boom's Reputation: The Promotion of the Boom in and by the U.S

CARLOS DE LA TORRE is director of political studies at FLACSO-Ecuador. He has published on Latin American populism and racism in Latin America. His latest books are Populist Seduction in Latin America (Ohio University Press, 2000) and Afroquiteños, ciudadanía y racismo (Quito: CAPP, 2002). With Steve Striffler he is editing The Ecuador Reader for Duke University Press.

AGUSTÍN E. FERRARO is Professor/Researcher at the Institute of Iberoamerican Studies of the University of Salamanca (Ramon y Cajal Program). From 2000 to 2002, he was an Alexander von Humboldt-Scholar at the Institute for Iberoamerican Studies in Hamburg and at the London School of Economics and Political Science. His research interests include civil service reform, legislatures, parliamentary controls of the bureaucracy and political theory.

GLORIA GONZÁLEZ-LÓPEZ is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Sociology at the University of Texas at Austin. Born and raised in Monterrey, Mexico, she received a PhD in sociology from the University of Southern California (2000). She conducts sexuality research with Mexican immigrants and teaches undergraduate and graduate courses on gender, sexuality, and qualitative methods. She has published her academic work in anthologies and academic journals and her book Erotic Journeys: Mexican Immigrants and their Sex Lives was released in the summer 2005 (University of California Press). A psychotherapist by training, she has worked with Latin American immigrants as a clinician, teacher, and sex educator at different community-based agencies in Texas and California.

GUILLERMO B. IRIZARRY received his PhD in Hispanic Literatures from the University of Texas at Austin (UT) in 1996. He has taught Latin American Literature, Caribbean Literature, and U.S. Latina/o Literature at UT, Bucknell University, and Yale University, and he is currently an Assistant Professor at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. His publications on Caribbean Literature, Latin American Drama, and U.S. Latina/o Literature have been included in Revista Iberoamericana, La Torre, Chasqui, Latin American Theatre Review, and Revista Canadiense de Estudios Hispánicos. His manuscript "José Luis González: El intelectual nómada" was published in fall 2005 by Editorial Callejón in Puerto Rico.

JOSÉ ANTONIO LUCERO is an Assistant Professor of Political Science at Temple University. His research on indigenous politics, social movements, and representation focuses primarily on Ecuador, Bolivia, and (more recently) Peru. His work has been published in several edited volumes. He is currently completing a book manuscript on indigenous movements in the Andes (under contract with the University of Pittsburgh Press).

YOVANNA PINEDA is an Assistant Professor in the History Department at St. Michael's College in Colchester, Vermont. Her research specialties are Argentine business and economic history. She has received awards from Fulbright IIE, the National Science Foundation, the UCLA International Studies and Overseas Program, and the St. Michael's Global Studies Program to conduct research for this project. She is currently working on her book manuscript, "Industrial Development in a Frontier Economy: The Industrialization of Argentina, 1890–1930."

JENNIFER PRIBBLE is a doctoral candidate in Political Science at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Her dissertation examines social policy reform in post-authoritarian Chile and Uruguay and will involve extensive field research in both countries. She has been awarded a Ford Foundation Dissertation Research Grant for her fieldwork in Chile.

ALEJANDRO PORTES is Professor of Sociology and chair of the Department at Princeton University where he also directs the Center for Migration and Development. He is author of books and articles in the fields of Latin American urbanization, development, international migration, and economic sociology. These include two articles on Latin American class structures, published in LARR in 1985 and 2003, which provide theoretical background for the present study.

BRYAN R. ROBERTS is C. B. Smith Sr. Chair in U.S.-Mexico Relations and Professor of Sociology at the University of Texas at Austin where he also directs the Mexican Center of the Teresa Lozano Long Institute of Latin American Studies. He is the author of books and articles on urbanization, development, social policy and citizenship. His field work on Latin American urbanization in the 1960s and 1970s is, along with that of Alejandro Portes, part of the historical perspective of this project.

JOHN W. SHERMAN is Professor of History and Director of the MA Program in History at Wright State University, near Dayton, Ohio. Primarily concerned with political ideology and opposition movements, his publications include The Mexican Right: The End of Revolutionary Reform, 1929-1940 (Praeger, 1997), Latin America in Crisis (Westview/Harper Collins, 2000), and A Communist Front at Mid-Century: The American Committee for Foreign Born, 1933-1959 (Praeger, 2001).

MATTHEW M. TAYLOR is an Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of São Paulo. He holds a PhD in Comparative Government and a master's degree in Public Policy, both from Georgetown University, and a BA from Princeton University. Prior to entering academia, he worked as a consultant to the private sector on economic and political issues in the Southern Cone and Brazil. His academic research on courts, public policy, and policy reform has been published in Comparative Politics, the Brazilian Journal of Political Economy, América Latina Hoy, Economics of Governance, and the Bulletin of Latin American Research, among other scholarly journals.

JOHN P. TUMAN is Associate Professor of Political Science and the Director of the Institute for Latin American Studies at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas. He is the author of Reshaping the North American Automobile Industry: Restructuring, Corporatism and Union Democracy in Mexico

(London and New York: Continuum, 2003). His recent research has examined Japanese aid flows to Latin American and other developing areas.

Errata

The title of Cliff Welch's review essay should read "Movement Histories: A Preliminary Historiography of Brazil's Landless Laborers' Movement (MST)," Volume 41, no. 1.