This specially commissioned issue features articles about different aspects of inequality and mental health, like the article by D Padgett on homelessness and housing instability and mental health (pp. 197-201), and the article by Hao and Farah about research on neural mechanisms underlying emotional processing in individuals of differing socioeconomic status (pp. 202-207). An editorial on the importance of placing poverty-inequality at the centre of psychiatry by Byrne and James is included (pp. 187-190). We thank the authors for their interesting articles.
